The Inaugural Queen's Wackathon

For the first time, Queen's University is hosting a hackathon dedicated to the celebration of creative solutions to non-existent problems. This hackathon celebrates the goofy, unnecessary, more "wacky" ideas undergraduate students can muster. Hence why we've dubbed it a "Wackathon." This year, for the first time ever, we plan on having 80+ students from Queen's participate in designing, creating, and demoing their ideas in 24 hours from March 20th - 21st.

We are excited to launch this event to give students an opportunity to work and showcase a project they normally would not, and should not spend time on. The goal of this event is to use tangible skills that students have learned and apply them to ideas that are delightfully ridiculous.

We will bring the most unfiltered and natural way for you to discover what students can do when given free creative range that isn't possible in a traditional hackathon setting.

Why Sponsor QWacks?

Queen's University students have made huge impacts on companies who choose to get involved. The students here love to work with companies and are always looking for opportunities to network. QWacks will offer a more natural and relaxed opportunity to network, which is something that isn't achieved at any conference at Queen's. Students will get to see your company sponsoring something enjoyable and ridiculous and see your company differently.

Sponsoring QWacks can help your company:

- Gain student awareness of your brand among many students of degrees ranging from computer science to business.
- Recruit students who catch your eye. During the event, students will demonstrate their technical knowhow, leadership and personality as they develop their idea.
- Sponsor a challenge or host a mini event. Students love to see what a specific company can bring to the table and this way you can throw a fun flare that excites students.
